History Teaching by Example.

Men, when not insensate by evil pas-sions and evil habits, with whatever cares they may be oppressed, naturally look forward, in every variety of situation and circumstances, to the probability of their entering into the vale of years with their entering into the vale of years with chastened feelings and matured experience. Longevity is not only desired, but desirable, if sought after in the true spirit of medical philosophy and of religious morality. The virtues of old age seem to exhibit human nature in its culmination; they carry with them at once the most eloquent precept and impressive example. Alexander, of Macedon, when he approached Jerusalem, in all the exultation of victory over Darius. the exultation of victory over Darius, and fully intending to give the city up to plunder, could not refrain from pros-trating himself before the Jewish High Priest, and thus worshiping the Deity in the venerable person of his aged minister. The Roman Senate, wavering as to the manner in which they should receive the propositions of Pyrrhus for peace and divided rule in Italy, were only called back to a sense of their dignity and impelled to the proud determination never pelled to the proud determination never to accept terms from an enemy, by the zealous counsel of Appius Claudius, who, though old, infirm and blind, was roused by the emergency, and had himself car-ried to the Senate house, where he spake an as oracle in predicting Rome's future

Dandolo, "Blind old Dandolo," was eighty-four years of age when he was made Doge of Venice; but, his ardor nothing cooled nor courage daunted by difficulties and danger, he led the Crusaders, when detained at Constantinople, to an attack and storming of that city, and was the first to plant the standard The Midnight Dispatches.

Washington, March 8—Representatives Boutwell and Washburne, from the Reconstruction Committee, have made a tory of Liberty for the preceding fifty years? Who did not feel that the triemph of liberty was more complete when he, the representative of its sufferings in the times of revolutionary anarchy and imperial rule, was, by national acclaim, at length hailed as its patriarch and the depository of its charter? Con-trast him wirh the great bad man, his compatriot, Mirabeau. The latter had a mind of the highest order, and eloquence the most commanding and impressive, but his commentary on national liberty was personal licentiousness, which led to ued neglect of those laws of hygiene on husbanded their health and mental vigor by a life of sobriety and temper-ance, so as to insure for themselves the longest span of years for the serving of their country. History would not have had to tell of Pitt dying of gout and wine, in the most critical period of the long war with France, at the age of 47; and of Fox soon following him, worn down by diseases, the effects of riotous living and excesses of all kinds. A lease of less than ten years added to the life of Pitt would have won for him the title, prematurely given by admiring friends and followers, of "the pilot that weath-ered the storm." He would have ap-peared as the representative of England at the great Congress of sovereigns and diplomatists in 1815, who re-made the map of Europe. Fox, after struggling for many years to win the post of Prime Minister, received at last and grudgingly, from the King the seals of office; but the gift came too late. To him it was merely as the viaticum to a dying man. He survived his new honor but a few months. He had squandered his health and manly vigor and great intel est in riotons living and excesses of every kind; and he died a bankrupt in services to his country, which so much needed them in that time of her sore trial. If we were in search of a name to point a moral, it would be Sheridan, the great orator and brilliant dramatist and wit, but wasting his health and energies in dissipations and orgies, which lost him the support of his party and the confidence of the nation, and led Barbarism is to be ameliorated by the remonstrances of those who live amongst it, if at all. The hideous practices of a part of the American people in a distant Territory are being energetically assailed by a daily newspaper printed at the capital of the abomination.

There is much in the doctrine of Mor-monium that is abhorrent to the noblest and most sacred feelings of the more in-telligent, especially of the young ladies connected with the Mormon families, revolting to their native sentiment of refinement and to the beautiful and tender ideals of homes and of domestic life that the pure-minded instinctively cherial. ### Mexican Bonds.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 5 .- House, The Speaker proceeded, it being the first business in order, to call on the States for bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. Woolbridge asked leave to intro-

Remarkable Dream-Two Villains Discovered by a Bleeping Vision and Sent to the State Prison.

The following singular circumstance is vouched for as strictly true: Some months since, a citizen of Branch county, in this State, employed two men to re-move his deceased wife's remains, which they pretended to do, and claimed, as recompense, one $3 50 and the other $1 50. The gentleman being well pleased with their execution of the work, gave the latter $2, which he refused, giving back $1. The following night the gentleman dreamed that one of the men visited his room naked, his body covered over with black spots, and, on being asked what ailed him, replied that the spots indicated the lies he had told, and a large one on his side the lie he had told a premature death—the direct effect of the grossest licentiousness and of contin-mains, which they had not done. Or awaking, his dream so impressed him which longevity so much depends.

Had Pitt and Fox, the two great rivals for fame and office, been animated by a truly patriotic ambition, they would have arrested and sent to State prison for one year for obtaining money under false pretenses, and are now serving out their time at Jackson. - Detroit Advertiser and Tribune, Feb. 26.

Awful.

The following is from a special dispatch to the Chicago Tribune, and shows a frightful degree of depravity in President Johnson, which can only be accounted for by supposing that he was afraid to be alone with a member of the party, the leaders of which are urging his "removal" in some way or other from the White House ;

The treatment which Republican members of Congress have received at the White House may be judged by this. The chairman of one of the important House committees called a short time since to see the President on business. and sent in his card. There was no one before him, but the President was not ready to see him and he took his seat to Soon the Copperhead editor, Florence, came in and in a few moments the President sent for him out of his When he had gone another Copturn. perhead editor, Cr. le, arrived and was at once admitted.
